Zerobabel Endecott, the author or compiler of the following collection of medical recipes, was the son of Governor John Endecott by his second wife Elizabeth Gibson, and was born about 1635. Mr. Endecott was married twice, his second wife being the daughter of Gov. John Winthrop and the widow of Rev. Antipas Newman. Where he received such medical education as sufficed for his time is not known, but undoubtedly he followed the custom that prevailed until the last century and read medicine in the home of some physician living in the Bay Colony and accompanied him while visiting patients. His brother John also was a surgeon, as appears from a bill preserved in the Massachusetts Archives, where under date of 1668 he charged five shillings for a Vomit and attendans on one John Clarke, weak and sike by reason of a scurvy and a dropsy. The public records disclose but little information of Zerobabel Endecott. In 1659, with his brother John and Daniel Samons, he was fined in the Quarterly Court for excessive drinking, a not uncommon weakness in those days. In 1665 he was ensign of the military company in Salem, and on two or more occasions he served upon the jury. In 1676 he was impaneled on a jury of inquest upon the body of one Jacob Goodale, a servant of Giles Corey, who died suddenly. It appeared that the man was almost a Natural Fool. The body was badly bruised, and Mr. Endecott performed a post mortem examination and found doddors of Blood about the man s heart. Mr. Endecott lived on the easterly side of what is now Washington Street, Salem, near the...
