Troubador Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 136 pages. Dimensions: 7.7in. x 5.0in. x 0.6in. Early Days contains two off-beat, unsentimental and text-based plays that are ideal for physical theatre; there are massive opportunities for slapstick, clowning, mime and movement. In Contractual Obligations, we watch as a mother fails to bond with her son and the consequences of that failure for both of them. You were desperate to have a baby. Yeah, well, now I'm desperate not to. In Armageddon we see a child disintegrating as the parents argue and fight their way towards a divorce. Nobody gets their old life back. The plays do not require child actors and they both try to illuminate the muddled and frightened feelings of a child caught up in a situation that he or she does not understand. They attempt to show how a child identifies with the unhappiness of his or her parent and how much a child struggles to take the responsibility on his or her shoulders when their family is in trouble. The common claim is that children are resilient, but a great many social evils that afflict children - drug and alcohol addiction, criminality - might be avoided if we face the fact that children pay a heavy price, one way or another, when they receive inadequate parenting. These plays also emphasise that this is not bound by class or income. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg, OR, La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
