

Martin Marprelate and Shakespeare's Fluellen: A New Theory of the Authorship of the Marprelate Tracts (Paperback)

By J Dover Wilson

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .From the beginning of the first section: THE Marprelate tracts are seven in number, if we include the broadside commonly known as The Minerals. The first two, The Epistle and Epitome, were in preparation in May, 1588, but The Epistle was not printed till about 15th October, while its sequel followed at the end of the next month. Meanwhile Waldegrave, the printer, in fear of detection, was forced to move his press about from place to place, with the assistance of the Welsh puritan reformer John Penry. At the beginning of February, 1589, he was lurking at Coventry, whence he issued, about the 20th, the broadside mentioned above, and just over a month later Hay any worke for Cooper, the third of the trails proper. Directly this was finished, he began to make preparations for leaving Coventry, and meeting one Sharpe, the bookbinder, afterwards the chief informer of the Martinist circle, he told him that he intended to go down into Devonshire to print Cartwright's answer to the Rhemish Testament, for the copy of which he had long been...
